While I am on industry, one other point I would like to make is the poor quality of our products. We should set better standards. This can be done not just by having better machinery, but it also requires better managerial skill.

THE VICE-CHAIRMAN (SHRI BHASKAR ANNAJI MASODKAR). Two minutes are left.

SARDAR JAGJIT SINGH AURORA: I am concluding. This is another aspect where we are infamously bad. We ought to better the quality of our products.

This brings me to my last point, willy nilly; our weak administration. We have failed to change the system of administration after Independence. We are still trying to work with a colonial system, in a democratic country. This colonial system has become moribund. This is responsible, to a great extent, for the inefficiency and backwardness in the country as a whole. Therefore, there is need to have reforms, revolutionary reforms, if necessary, in the system, if this country is to make progress. I would like to conclude by pleading the cause of the ex-servicemen. They have been given a raw deal. No mention has been made in this Address that they have been promised a 'one rank one pension'. The last Government took months and then finally decided to give them some ad hoc increment. Even that is being denied by this Government. I think it is nothing short of a criminal act. Now forget about the promises you made, look into the conditions of the ex-servicemen, especially of those who retired several years ago. They are old, their needs are very pressing that they seem to have been forgotten by this Government which, I think, is very reprehensible. So, immediately or as soon as possible ex-servicemen must be given their due increments which have been promised to them. Even though the officers' grade had not been decided, it should not take the present Government long to give one rank pension or at least an ad hoc increment to all of them, whether they are officers or other personnel. Otherwise, this would be a very unfrotunate happening which can have very serious repercussions in the villages from where most of the ex-servicemen come from.
